A New Home for the Conversation

Today, we are pleased to share an important milestone in the journey of Green Thinking Review – and, above all, to say thank you.

GTR now has a dedicated home on the web.

But this milestone is not ours alone. It belongs equally to the readers, subscribers and Green Thinkers who have followed the publication, shared its ideas, returned to its editions and helped sustain the conversation over time.

For many editions, GTR has reached you principally through this newsletter and through the conversations that follow each publication. Along the way, a substantial body of ideas, case studies, practical insights and reflections on sustainable building has accumulated. We felt that work deserved more than the passing life of a social-media feed.

It needed a home.

And because you have read, subscribed, shared, questioned, reflected and grown with us, we do not see this simply as a new GTR platform. It is also a new home for the community that has helped GTR become what it is.

Green thinking should not disappear with the scroll.

GTR Tip

Ideas gain value when they can be revisited, connected and carried forward.

What the New GTR Home Gives You

The new GTR website brings our growing body of work into one place. You can browse past editions, revisit earlier themes, download issues for later reading, and explore case studies, insights and resources without searching through old posts.

More importantly, the site gives GTR a living archive—a place where ideas can remain useful beyond the week they are published, connect with other conversations, and continue to serve professionals, students, educators and Green Thinkers.

GTR Insight

An archive is not where ideas go to rest. It is where they remain available to work.

The newsletter continues, but now within a stronger publishing ecosystem: the website is our home, the newsletter brings new thinking to you, and our wider platforms help the conversation travel.
